BUNG BY CHARLES SWAIN.

So mournfully she gazed on him, As if her heart would brenk; Her silence more upbraiding bins, Than all her tougue might speak.

So mournfully she gazed on him, Yet answer made also none; But tours, that might not be repressed, Fell alowly, one by one.

"I hoped," she sald-but what she hoped In blushes died away-"I thought," she said-but what she thought ther tears might only say.

She could do nought but gaze on him, For answer she had none; How tomes, that would not be correspond. Pell slowly, one by one.

Alas! that life should be so short-So short, and yet so sail; Alas! that we so late are taught To prize the world we had?

The silent serrow of that hour Will haunt his daily truck; And oft he'll wish, when lost the power, He'd called that weeper back.
